In the world of school-based crisis response, it is critical that we don't substitute metal detection for mental detection. Our ability to identify and connect with students in need of additional support is one effective prevention strategy to avert potentially tragic situations. Despite recent national headlines focusing on the high profile "school shooter," crisis situations can take on many different forms. A successful crisis team needs to be prepared to deal with any situation which may impact our students, their families, and the community at large.

This network meeting will focus on the crucial link between schools and law enforcement, identifying youth in need of additional supports, and primary, secondary, and tertiary prevention strategies designed to restore "normalcy" to our building in "abnormal" times. Please bring questions, concerns, ideas, and strategies with you as we will be sharing with one another throughout the process.

(Please forward this announcement onto others who may be interested.)
